

SYNOPSIS.

George Percival Algernan Jones, vicepresident of the Metropolitan Oriental Rug company of New York, thirsting for romance, is in Cairo on a business trip.
Horace Ryanne arrives at the hotel in Dairo with a carefully guarded bundle.
Ryanne sells Jones the famous hely Yhirdes rug which he admits having stolen from a pasha at Bagdad. Jones meets Major Callahan and later is introduced to Yortune Chedsoye by a woman to whom he had loaned 150 pounds at Monte Carlo some months previously, and who turns put to be Fortune's mother. Jones takes Mrs. Chedsoye and Fortune to a polo game. Fortune returns to Jones the money borrowed by her mother. Mrs.
Chedsoye appears to be engaged in some mysterious enterprise unknown to the faughter. Ryanne Interests Jones in the United Romance and Adventure company, a concern which for a price will arrange any kind of an adventure to order. Mrs. Chedsoye, her brother, Major Callahan, Wallace and Ryanne, as the United Romance and Adventure company, plan a risky enterprise involving Jones.
Ryanne makes known to Mrs. Chedsoys his intention to marry Fortune. Mrs.
Chedsove declares she will not permit it.
Plans are laid to prevent Jones sailing for home. Ryanne steals Jones' letters and cable dispatches. He wires agent in New York, in Jones name, that he is renting house in New York to some triends. Mahomed, keeper of the holy surpet, is on Ryanne's trail. Ryanne promises Fortune that he will see that Jones comes to no harm as a result of his purchase of the rug. Mahomed accosts Ryanne and demands the Thiordes rug.
Ryanne tells him Jones has the rug and tuggests the abduction of the New York merchant as a means of securing its return.

CHAPTER X .- (Continued.)

Stubborn as the lock was, perseverance overcame it. George then, as a slight diversion, spread the ancient Thiordes over the trunk and stared at t in pleasurable contemplation. What a beauty it was! What exquisite blue. what soft red, what minute patterns! and this treasure was his. He leaned Jown upon it with his two hands. A color stole into his cheeks. It had its fertile and active. For a time the source in an old confusion; school- process of the evolution of thought boys feering a mate seen walking home from school with a girl. It was all rot, he perfectly knew, this wishing business; and yet he flung into the of those circumferential railways; she sun-warmed, sun-gilded space an ardent wish, sent it speeding round the world from east to west. Fast as heat, fast as light it traveled, for no sooner tad it sprung from his mind than it listless, and indeterminedly likened entered the window of a room across the corridor. Whether the window was open or shut was of no importance and commotion of the streets were whatever. Such wishes penetrated and no longer absorbed; it was as if she went through all obstacles. And this one touched Fortune's eyes, her hair, her lips; it caressed her in a thousand happy ways. But, alas! such wishes are without temporal power.

Fortune never knew. She sat in a phair, her fingers locked tensely, her eyes large and set in gaze, her lips compressed, her whole attitude one of and there George's wish found her,

George did not see her at lunch, and clear, clear as the sky outside. All Shepheard's. When did Mr. Jones leave for America? What! on the mor row? The Major shook his head regretfully. There was no place like Cairo for Christmas.

George called a carriage, drove about the principal streets and shopping districts, and used his eyes dillgently; but it was love's labor lost Not even when he returned at tea-time did he see her. Why hadn't he known and got up? He could have shown her the bazaars; and there wasn't a dragoman in Cairo more familiar with them than he. A wasted day, totally wasted. He hung about the lounging-room till it was time to go up and dress for dinner. Tonight (as if the gods had turned George's future affairs over to the care of Momus) he dressed as if he were going to the opera; swallowtail, white vest, high collar and white lawn cravat, opera-Fedora, and thinsoled pumps; all the habiliments and demi-habiliments supposed to make the man. When he reached what he thought to be the glass of fashion and the mold of form, he turned for the first time toward his trunk. He did not rub his eyes; it wasn't at all necessary; the thing he saw, or rather did not see, was established beyond a doubt, as plainly definite as two and two are four. The ancient Yhlordes had taken upon itself one of the po tentialities of its fabulous prototype that of invisibility; it was gone.

CHAPTER XI.

Episodic.

Fortune had immediately returned from the bazaars. And a kind of torpor blanketed her mind, usually so was denied her; she tried to think, but there was an appalling lack of continuity, of broken threads. It was like one traveled, but did not get anywhere. Ryanne had told her too much for his own sake, but too little for hers. She sat back in the carriage, inert and her condition to driftwood in the ebb and flow of beach-waves. The color were riding through emptiness, through the unreality of a dream. She was oppressed and stifled, too; harbinger of storms.

Mechanically she dismissed the carriage at the hotel, mechanically she went to her room, and in this semiconscious mood sat down in a chair. futilely. Oh, there was one thing wilderment, which these days recur- said to the child? red with frequency. A sense of time was lacking; for luncheon hour came and passed without her being definitely aware of it. This in itself was a puzzle. A jaunt, such as she had taken that morning, always keened the edge of her appetite; and yet, there was no craving whatever.

Where was her mother? If she would only come now, the cumulative doubts of all these months should be put into speech. They had treated her as one would treat a child; it was neither just nor reasonable. If not as a child, but as one they dared not trust, then they were afraid of her. But why? She pressed her hands together, impotently. Ryanne, clever as he was, had made a slip or two which he had sought to cover up with a jest Why should he confess himself to be a rogue unless his tongue had got the better of his discretion? If he was a rogue, why should her mother and her uncle make use of him, if not for roguery's sake? They were fools, fools! If they had but seen and understood her as she was, she would have gone to the bitter end with them, loyally, with sealed lips. But no; they had chosen not to see; and in this had morally betrayed her. Ah, it rankled, and the injustice of it grew from pain to fury. At that moment, had she known anything, she certainly would have denounced them. Of what use was loyalty, since none of them sought it in her? The Major was wiser than he knew when he spoke of the hundredth danger, the danger unforeseen, the danger against which they could make no preparation. And he would have been first to sense the irony of it could he have seen where this danger lay.

Why should they wish the pleasant young man out of the way? Why should Ryanne wish to inveigle him into the hands of this man Mahomed? Was it merely self-preservation, or something deeper, more sinister? Think! Why couldn't she think of something? It was only a little pleasure trip to Cairo, they had told her, and when she had asked to go along, they seemed willing enough. But they had come to this hotel, when formerly they had always put up at Shepheard's. A- here again the question why? Was it because Mr. Jones was staying here? She liked him, what little she had seen of him. He was out of an altogether different world than that to which she was accustomed. He was neither insanely mad over cards nor a social idler. He was a young man with a real interest in life, a worker, notwithstanding that he was reputed to be independently rich. And her mother had once borrowed money of him, never intending to pay it back. The shame of it! And why should she approach him the very first day and recall the incident, if not with the ulterior purpose of using him further? As a ball strikes a wall only to rebound to the thrower, so it was with all these questions. There was never any answer.

Tired out, mentally and physically, she laid her head upon the cool top of the stand. And in this position her mother, who had returned to dress for tea, found her. Believing Fortune to be asleep, Mrs. Chedsoye dropped a hand upon her shoulder.

Fortune raised her head. "Why, child, what is the matter?" the mother asked. The face she saw was not tear-stained; it was as cold and passionless as that by which sculptors represent their interpretations of Justice.

"Matter?" Fortune spoke, in a tone bat did not reassure the other. "In the first place I have only one real question to ask. It depends upon how ou answer it. Am I really your daughter?"

"Really my daughter?" Mrs. Chedsoye stepped back, genuinely astonished. "Really my daughter? The child is mad!" as if addressing an imaginary third person. "What makes you ask such a silly question?" She was in a hurry to change her dress, but the new attitude of this child of hers warranted some patience.

"That is no answer," said Fortune. with the unmoved deliberation of a prosecuting attorney.

"Certainly you are my daughter." "Good. If you had denied it. I should have beld my peace; but since you admit that I am of your flesh and blood, I am going to force you to recognize that in such a capacity I have some rights. I did not ask to come into this world; but insomuch as I am here, I propose to become an indi-vidual, not a thing to be given bread and butter upon sufferance. I have Is the continual evasion calculated to been talking with Horace. I met him still my distrust? Yes, I distrust you, too late." in the bazaars this morning. He said some things which you must answer." "Hornce? And what has he said. pray tell?" Her expression was filppant, but a certain inquietude pene-

They ached dully, the dull pain of be- | beating. What had the love-lorn fool "He said that he was not a good man, and that you tolerated him because he ran errands for you. What kind of errands?" Mrs. Chedsoye did not know whether to laugh or take the child by the shoulders and shake her soundly. was laughing when he said that. Errands? One would scarcely call it that." "Why did you renew the acquaintance with Mr. Jones, when you knew that you never intended paying back that loan?" Here was a question, Mrs. Chedsoye ealized, from the look of the child, that would not bear evasion. "What makes you think I never in ended to repay him?" Fortune laughed. It did not sound grateful in the mother's ears. "Mother, this is a crisis: it can not be met by counter-questions nor by flippancy. You know that you did not intend to pay him. What I demand to know is, why you spoke to him again, so affably, why you seemed so eager to enter into his good graces once more. Answer that." Her mother pondered. For once she was really at a loss. The unexpectedness of this phase caught her off her palance. She saw one thing vividly, egretfully: she had missed a valuable point in the game by not adjusting ner play to the growth of the child. who had, with the phenomenal suddenness which still baffles the psychologists, stepped out of girlhood into womanhood, all in a day. What the child at Mentone!

"I am waiting," said Fortune. "There are more questions; but I want this one answered first."

"This is pure insolence!" "Insolence of a kind, yes." "And I refuse to answer. I have ome authority still."

"Not so much, mother, as you had esterday. You refuse to explain?" "Absolutely!"

"Then I shall judge you without mercy." mother by the wrist, and she was the stronger of the two. "Can't you un- that wasn't wanted."

patchwork, squares have been formed. ish chit! Harm Mr. Jones? Why? What of the men who used to come For what purpose? I have no more the hammer, in order to satisfy an into the villa and play cards with Uncle interest in him than if he were one George, the men who went away and of those mummles over in the musenever came back? What of your long um. And I certainly meant to repay disappearances of which I knew nothing except that one day you vanished | hadn't taken the task upon your own and upon another you came back? Did broad shoulders. I am in a hurry. you think that I was a fool, that I I am going out to Mena House to tea. had no time to wonder over these I've let Celeste off for the day, so things? You have never tried to make a friend of me; you have always done your best to antagonize me. Did you hate my father so much that, when his death put him out of range, you had to concentrate it upon me? My father!" Fortune roughly flung aside the arm. "Who knows about lantly. him, who he was, what he was, what he looked like? As a child, I used to ask you, but never would you speak. All I know about him nurse told me. This much has always burned my mind: you married him for wealth that he did not have. What do you mean by this simple young man across the corridor?" Mrs. Chedsoye was pale, and the ar tistic touch of rouge upon her cheeks did not disguise the pallor. The true evidence lay in the whiteness of her nose. Never in her varied life had she felt more helpless, more impotent. To be wild with rage, and yet to be powerless! That alertness of mind, that mental buoyancy, which had always given her the power to return a volley in kind, had deserted her. Moreover, she was distinctly alarmed. This little fool, with a turn of her hand, might send tottering into ruins the skillful planning of months.

"Are you in love with him?" aiming to gain time to regather her scattered thoughts.

"Love?" bitterly. "I am in a fine mood to love any one. My question, fool she had been not to have left my question," vehemently; "my question!

"I refuse absolutely to answer you!" Anger was first to reorganize its forces; and Mrs. Chedsoye felt the heat of it run through her veins. But, oddly enough, it was anger directed less toward the child than toward her own palpable folly and oversight.

"Then I shall leave you. I will go out into the world and earn my own bread and butter. Ah," a little brokenly, "if you had but given me a little Fortune rose, her eyes blaz- kindness, you do not know how loval ing passionately. She caught her I should have been to you! But no; am and always have been the child please unhook my waist and do not bother your head about Mr. Jones." She turned her back upon her daughter, quite confident that she had for the time suppressed the incipient rebel-She heard Fortune crossing the "What are you doing?" petu-

"I am ringing for the ball-maid." And Fortune resumed her chair, picked up her Baedeker, and became apparently absorbed over the map of Assuan.

Again wrath mounted to her mother's head. She could combat anger. tears, protestations; but this indifference, studied and unfilial, left her weaponless; and she was too wise to unbridle her tongue, much as she longed to do so. She was beaten. Not of matrimony. The wife set up the an agreeable sensation to one who counted only her victories.

"Fortune, later you will be sorry for this spirit," she said, when she felt the tremor of wrath no longer in her throat.

Fortune turned a page, and jotted down some notes with a pencil. Sad Dickens' "Bleak House," and people as she was at heart, tragic as she began to say that there wasn't much knew the result of this outbreak to chance for Mrs. Probst getting judgbe, she could hardly repress a smile ment until the day of judgment or unat the thought of her mother's discomfiture.

And so the chasm widened, and nall-maid knocked and came in just then. It at least saved her the ignominy of a retreat. She dressed, however, with the same deliberate care that she had always used. Noth joyed as much distinction as a Gretfng ever deranged her sense of proportion relative to her tollet, nothing ever made her forget its importance

"Good-by dear," she said. "I shall be in at dinner." If the maid had any suspicion that there had been a quarrel, she should at least be impressed with the fact that she, Mrs. Chedsoye, was not to blame for it. Fortune nibbled the end of her pen-

The door closed behind her mother and the maid. She waited for a time. Then she sprang to the window and stood there. She saw her mother driven off. She was dressed in pearlgrey, with a Reynolds hat of grey velour and sweeping plumes: as handsome and distinguished a woman as could be found that day in all Cairo. Old Courthouse at Berrien Springs The watcher threw her Baedeker, her note-book, and her pencil violently into a corner. It had come to her at last, this thing that she had been striving for since noon. She did not care what the risks were; the storm was too high in her heart to listen to the voice of caution. She would do it; for she judged it the one thing, in justice to her own blood, she must accomplish. She straightway dressed for the street; and if she did not give the same care as her mother to the vital function, she produced an effect that merited comparison. She loltered before the porter's bu reau till she saw him busily engaged in answering questions of some wom en tourists. Then, with a slight but friendly nod, she stepped into the bureau and stopped before the key-rack. She hung up her key, but took it down again, as if she had changed her mind. At least, this was the porter's impression as he bowed to her in the midst of the verbal bombardment. Fortune went up-stairs. Ten or fifteen minutes elepsed, when she returned, hung up the key, and walked briskly toward the side-entrance at the very moment George, in his fruitless search of her, pushed through the revolving doors in front. And all the time she was wondering how it was that her knees did not given under. It was terrible. She balanced between laughter and tears, hysterically.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Yellow Fever Germ. The theory that mosquitoes convey the disease known as "yellow fever" is many years old, but it was not until the year 1895 that it was proven crossed electric wires, attacked the to be true. During that year Major Ronald Ross, working in India along the lines of Sir Patrick Manson's theory, demonstrated that mosquitoes of the genus called anopheles clarifer conveyed the disease. In 1897-98 ex- street. periments in Cubs and other parts of derstand? I am no longer a child, I The despair in the gesture that fol-am a woman. I do not ask, I demand!" lowed these words stirred the moth-clusion. It is in consequence of this clusion. It is in consequence of this discovery that the dread disease is "My child!" she now being so largely checked in the countries where it has hitherto been so destructive of human life.

> Letter boxes have been invented for office buildings and apartments which deliver mail dropped into them on know about the world? What could the ground floor to their ewners rooms, even the weight of a card start thing but read romantic novels and line the elevating machinery.

> > The New Tube Gown. She-How do you like my new He-Huh! It reminds me of a popuiar theater. She-What do you mean?

He-Standing room only.-Cornell

Easily Defined. "Father," said little Rollo, "what is foible?" "A foible, my son, is comething comebody else is interested in and you're not.

Auction of Old Michigan Courthouse Brings Up Odd Story.

Building at Berrien Springs Once Owned by a Young Widow Who Was Woed and Won by a Chicagoan in an Odd Place.

Berrien Springs, Mich.-The old Berrien county courthouse at Berrien Springs, Mich., connected with which there is an unusual Chicago romance, has been advertised to be sold under febtedness that has been hanging over It for some time.

A Chicago minister named Flavius. I. Probst once married into the possession of this historic structure, which was erected in the early '30s, and which at one time was one of the nost extensive marrying places in the middle west

After the county sent was moved from Berrien Springs to St. Joseph the courthouse and the jail came into the possession of Mrs. Julia Allen, a prety young widow of the former county seat. She became a member of a party invited to go through one of the big Chicago water tunnels, and on :his trip, so the story goes, she met; Mr. Probst, and before either of them had again saw daylight they had fallen in love with each other, he proposed and she accepted. They were subsequently married, and took up their abode in the fall section of the old county courthouse, where they spent their honeymoon and lived happily for some time. Then came a ripple in this odd sea claim that her husband had hypnotized her into deeding him the courtnouse property, and there was a suit to set aside the transfer. This suit nung in the courts for some years, and it had many of the angles of the !amous Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce case in til the old courthouse had rotted away from the ravages of time. But a son of Mrs. Probst by her first marriage vent on widening till the end of time. altimately effected a settlement, and Mrs. Chedsoye was glad that the again the building passed back to the ownership of Mrs. Probst. Berrien Springs at the time the old courthouse was housing the governmental business of Berrien county enna Green as St. Joseph since has taken to itself. Lovers paddled their canoes up and down the St. Joe river, stopping long enough at Berrien to be married in its quaint old courthous Children and grandchildren of Michigan, Indiana and Illinois pioneers pledged their troths within its shadow and were joined in matrimony from its crude bench.

The people of this section of Berrien county say to this day that St. Joe boosters stole the county seat, and long after Mrs. Allen had acquired the old buildings the promoters of the big dune overlooking Lake Michigan evinced genuine regret that they hadn't carried the historic old building along with the books.

Up to this time no one knows just what will become of the old southwest Michigan landmark, but among the possibilities is the chance that it will pass into the hands of the local lovers of history to house many different objects that tell of the early day and of human struggle in permanent settlement.

DOG'S BARK SAVES MASTER

Boy Rescued From Suffocation in Sleep by Firemen Whose Quarters Are Across the Street.

Chicago.-The life of Nathan Kaplan, son of Frank Kaplan, owner of a saloon at 506 West Chicago avenue. was saved by the barking of a fox terrier when fire attacked the build-

The boy was asleep in the rear of the saloon when fire, started by barroom. He was rapidly becoming unconscious from the smoke when the barking of the dog was heard by Lieutenant Frank Stift of engine company No. 14, whose quarters are across the

Upon going to the saloon, Lieutenant Stift and Pipeman Oscar Fugato found it filled with smoke. The barking was becoming fainter, and they broke down the door. In a rear room they found young Kaplan unconscious and carried him out.

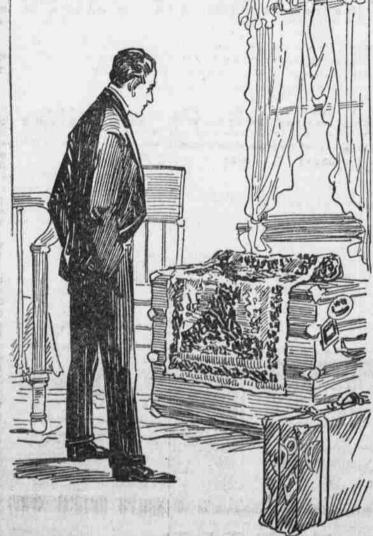

A "still" alarm was sounded, after which the two firemen rescued the elder Kaplan, his wife and their daughters, Catherine and Elizabeth, from their apartments above the saloon.

Sells Whisky for a Ple. Conneaut, O.—It coat Sig Hahn, a Conneaut druggist, $1,400 to sell about an ounce of whisky to a woman who came into his store a few The woman, a dry detective, asked for enough whisky to make a m ple, and the druggist compiled. The detective at once swore out a warrant for his arrest.

Habn was tried on four counts and pleaded guilty to each, being fined $150 on each count. He was also as-sensed $800, Dow-Alken tax by the

What a Beauty It Was. consequently did not enjoy the hour. | was not right; something was wrong; Was she ill? Had she gone away? and this wrong upon one side con-Would she return before he started? cerned her mother, her uncle He greated the Major as one greets a Ryanne, and upon the other side, Mr. tong-lost friend; and by gradations Jones. Think and think as she might, considered clever indeed, her endeavors gave her no single illubrought the conversation down to For- mination. Four blind walls surround nune. No, the Major did not know ed her. The United Romance and Adwhere she was. She had gone early venture company—there could not posto the bazaars. Doubtless she was sibly be such a thing in existence; it funching alone somewhere. She had was a jest of Ryanne's to cover up the trick of losing herself at times, something far more sectous.

We Chedseve was visiting friends at She pressed her eyes with a hand.

First Hat Worn in Europe History Records That it Adorned the Rouen the beginning of the custom of Head of Charles VII. on His Entry Into Rouen. Charles VII on his triumphal entry when the ciergy began to high for persons were at last forbidant of supersons were at last forbidant of

From this entry of Charles' into wearing hats in Europe is dated. It was all very well for the rich citizen

A still more str._ing development took place in the sixteenth century By the statute of 13 Elizabeth every person above the age of seven years, and under a certain degree, was obliged on Sundays and holidays to "wear a woollen cap-made in England-and

Dated her heart and accelerated its fally. "Let go!"

Distinguished "Tuberculosists," John Milton, Dr. Samuel Johnson, Sir Walter Scott, Percy Byashe Shelley, John Keats, Thomas Hood, Laurence Sterne, Thomas de Quincey, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Henry Thoreau, Mollere, Shiller, Goethe, nier, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Ralph Waldo Emerger Hawthorne, Ralph Waldo Emergon Hondre de Balzac.
Jane Austen, Samuel Butler, Edward Gibbon, Francis Beaumont, Baruch
Spinoza, Immanuel Kant, John R.
Green, Richard Baxter, Marie Bashmay be mialesding of harmful.

know what frankness and truth are. bands, you, my mother. You have made the mistake of leaving me alone too much.

never knew why."

kirtseff, Jean Jacques Rousseau, John Southey and Mme. De Stael are among the geniuses found by Arthur C. Jacob son, M. D., who has studied their health records, to have suffered from some form of tuberculosis or to have died of it.

"No." Fortune drew back. "It is

"Have it so. But you speak of go ing out into the world to earn your

"Certainly You Are My Daughter."

She drew the older woman toward her, er's calloused heart, moved it strange-eye to eye. "You palter, you always ly, mysteriously. "My child!" she palter; palter and evade. You do not said impulsively, holding out her

I have always distrusted you, but I own bread and butter. What do you

Mrs. Chedsoye tugged, but ineffectu- you do? You have never done any-

Where Suggestion Hurts.